Greetings from Plimoth Plantation!

The Horticulture Department at Plimoth Plantation – a living history museum in Plymouth, MA – is currently accepting applications for a Historical Horticulture intern for the 2016 summer semester. We are reaching out to universities and their affiliates with strong horticulture and landscape design programs hoping to find a student with an interest in historic gardening, heirloom plants and landscape reconstruction, and public history. The intern will work alongside our horticulture staff in the museum’s diverse historical landscapes including the formal turn-of-the-century Hornblower Gardens designed by Mary Francis Cunningham, collaborating on designs and constructions for new garden areas. There may also be opportunities for interns to engage our visitors about the plants growing at Plimoth Plantation, both cultivated and native, as well as the horticultural practices used traditionally by Wampanoag and English communities.

This internship offers a generous stipend as well as application for housing.

Full internship descriptions and application requirements can be found at www.plimoth.org/internships. Please feel free to share this opportunity with the students, undergraduate and graduate, in your department. Questions about the position, the internship application process, or Plimoth Plantation may be sent to me directly at interns@plimoth.org.

We hope to hear from you soon.

Best wishes,

Hilary Goodnow
Museum Programs Administrator & Intern Coordinator
